The U.S. has just 5% of the world's population, but we consume 26% of the world's oil. We import more than one-half of all oil we use.

More than 65% of the proven oil reserves are in the Middle East, with Iraq having the second largest of any nation, and only 3% are in the U.S. Our oil consumption is estimated to increase 33% within 20 years, which will double oil imports from the Persian Gulf if we don't change to renewable energy.

Many top Bush Administration officials have close ties to oil corporations, including the President, Vice President, Secretary of Defense, and National Security Advisor.

Increasing our fuel efficiency to 55mpg would save almost twice as much oil as we import from the Middle East. Proven fuel-efficient technologies exist, it's the political will that's missing.

The Bush Administration is trying to use the war to justify attacks on the environment, such as opening up our public lands, including the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, to drilling for oil.

While the Bush Administration is willing to wage war to get oil from overseas, our own communities suffer from fossil-fuel pollution from power plants, oil refineries, and gas-guzzling vehicles.
